

How can you possibly limit the rights of satellite radio beyond the limitation of any other radio station? People CHOOSE to pay for satellite radio in order to get information that we can't get elsewhere on the radio. The quality of service is phenomenal not to mention the variety. If television channels like HBO (also a paid service) are allowed to broadcast more freely than regular network television, isn't limiting paid satellite radio in conflict with this? The ability to have consistent and dependable broadcasts anywhere in the contiguous U.S. is an amazing thing. Do not limit this service. Being able to get weather or traffic all the time rather than finding and waiting for a local channel to get to their weather or traffic segment is a valuable service that I PAY FOR!
